Sample and Data Access

Applicants who wish to use IODP samples and/or data must be sure that their proposed projects do not conflict with existing expedition-related projects (e.g., shipboard scientists' projects). Proponents and their intended advisors should resolve this issue by contacting expedition co-chiefs and shipboard scientists before they submit their proposals.

Please note, receiving research support from C-DEBI does not guarantee access to samples or data that are not available to the community at large. A moratorium period of one year is granted to members of the expedition science party to conduct drilling project-related research before core samples and data are made available to the general scientific community. Applicants for C-DEBI support are responsible for securing access to all samples and data needed to complete proposed work. For the IODP Sample, Data and Obligations Policy and other sample and data access information, visit <http://www.iodp.org/access-data/>
